SAN FRANCISCO DIVISION

FIRST AMENDMENT COALITION,
VIRGINIA LAROE, and EUGENE
VOLOKH,

Plaintiffs,

v.

DAVID CHIU, in his official capacity as City Attorney of San Francisco; and ROB BONTA, in his official capacity as Attorney General of California,

Defendants.

Civil Case No. 3:24-cv-08343-TSH

FILED UNDER SEAL

PLAINTIFFS' NOTICE OF MOTION AND MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

Date: January 2, 2025
Time: 10:00 A.M.
Dept.: Courtroom E – 15th Floor

1 TO THE COURT, THE PARTIES, AND ALL ATTORNEYS OF RECORD:

2 Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 65 and Civ. L.R. 7-1, PLAINTIFFS FIRST AMENDMENT
3 COALITION, VIRGINIA LAROE, and EUGENE VOLOKH move for a preliminary 4 injunction. This motion will be heard at the date and time above or as soon as the Court may 5 hear it.

6 Plaintiffs ask this Court to issue a preliminary injunction prohibiting Defendants 7 David Chiu and Rob Bonta, in their official capacities, from enforcing California Penal Code 8 section 851.92(c), which prohibits any person from “disseminat[ing] information relating to 9 a sealed arrest,” including information lawfully obtained from public sources. Each violation 10 is subject to a civil penalty of up to $2,500.

11 There is good cause to grant the motion. In recent weeks, the San Francisco City 12 Attorney has repeatedly threatened to enforce the provision against those who publish or 13 discuss the contents of a sealed incident report documenting the arrest of a high-profile tech 14 CEO—a report the CEO claims the San Francisco Police Department made public by 15 releasing it in response to a public records request. Plaintiffs—a First Amendment advocacy 16 group, its advocacy director, and a legal commentator—want to engage in protected 17 expression barred by the statute, including public advocacy and publication of articles 18 concerning efforts by the CEO and government officials to suppress the publication of 19 information about his arrest.

20 The statute is a content-based restriction on speech, failing strict scrutiny because it 21 is not narrowly tailored to advance a compelling government interest. The statute obligates 22 the public—including journalists, commentators, victims of crime, and witnesses—to keep 23 the government’s secrets. The First Amendment forbids that result, and the Court should 24 enjoin Defendants from enforcing the provision.

INTRODUCTION1

BACKGROUND 2

 A tech CEO’s effort to attract business from intelligence agencies draws scrutiny from journalists. 3

 The San Francisco Police Department shares Blackman’s sealed arrest report, which Blackman attempts to suppress..... 4

 The San Francisco City Attorney repeatedly threatens to use California’s anti-dissemination statute for sharing information about the arrest. 5

 Plaintiffs, who regularly comment on censorship, intend to republish or discuss the report—the same speech the City Attorney is targeting..... 6

STATEMENT OF ISSUES TO BE DECIDED 7

ARGUMENT 8

 I. Plaintiffs Are Likely to Show the Anti-Dissemination Statute Violates the First Amendment. 8

 A. The statute is a presumptively unconstitutional content-based restriction on speech. 9

 B. The statute fails strict scrutiny because California’s asserted interest in reputation does not serve a compelling interest..... 10

 C. The anti-dissemination statute fails strict scrutiny because it is not the least restrictive means or narrowly tailored.....12

 i. In reaching lawfully obtained information, the law crosses clear lines set forth by the Supreme Court.13

 ii. The statute is overinclusive, reaching beyond consumer reporting agencies and ignoring means to exempt publishers.....14

 iii. The statute is underinclusive because it exempts those responsible for safeguarding sealed records.17

 II. Plaintiffs Are Experiencing Irreparable Harm in the Absence of Preliminary Injunctive Relief.....17

 III. Injunctive Relief Serves the Public Interest and the Balance of Harms Tips in Plaintiffs’ Favor. 18

2 Time and again, the Supreme Court has struck down states’ misguided attempts to 3 forbid publishing lawfully obtained information about matters of public concern. When the 4 “State attempts the extraordinary measure of punishing truthful publication in the name of 5 privacy,” the First Amendment requires the government to show it is justified by an interest 6 of the “highest order.” Fla. Star v. B.J.F., 491 U.S. 524, 533, 540 (1989). That tall order is 7 not satisfied even by weighty considerations like encouraging rape victims to contact police 8 or discouraging wiretapping. See, e.g., id. at 534 (name of a rape victim); Bartnicki v.
9 Vopper, 532 U.S. 514, 534–35 (2001) (broadcast of phone call known to have been recorded 10 unlawfully); Landmark Commc’ns, Inc. v. Virginia, 435 U.S. 829, 838 (1978) (information 11 about the investigation of a judge). Once a publisher has obtained information in a lawful 12 manner, even if a source obtained it unlawfully, the government may not “punish the 13 ensuing publication of that information based on a defect in the chain.” Bartnicki, 532 U.S.
14 at 528.

15 Cal. Penal Code § 851.92(c) is another such law that ignores the Court’s First 16 Amendment precedents. The content-based statute prohibits almost anyone from 17 “disseminat[ing] information” in any way “relating” to sealed arrest reports, on pain of civil 18 penalty. Journalists, free speech and transparency advocates, crime victims, and witnesses 19 are just some of the many persons and entities that Section 851.92(c) manages or threatens 20 to silence.

21 Recently, the City Attorney of San Francisco has wielded Section 851.92(c) to deter 22 accurate reporting on Maury Blackman, a prominent tech executive closely tied to 23 intelligence agencies. After a journalist lawfully obtained a sealed police report about 24 Blackman’s 2021 domestic violence arrest, the tech CEO enlisted the San Francisco City 25 Attorney to help suppress reporting on it. At his behest, the City Attorney is threatening to 26 enforce Section 851.92(c) against those who publish or discuss the police report.

27 Those threats have forced commentators and publishers to self-censor. One of those 28 is Plaintiff Eugene Volokh, a legal commentator and journalist who publishes the Volokh

1 Conspiracy, a well-read blog covering the First Amendment, court system abuses, and public 2 access to court records. Volokh wants to republish the arrest report and write about Black-3 man’s lawsuit against the journalist, which necessarily includes “information relating to” the 4 sealed arrest. The issue is also within the wheelhouse of Plaintiffs First Amendment 5 Coalition (“FAC”) and its Advocacy Director, Virginia “Ginny” LaRoe. FAC is a San Rafael-6 based nonprofit working to protect press freedom and the people’s right to know. FAC and 7 LaRoe seek to advance FAC’s mission by discussing—in the press, on FAC’s own website, 8 and in public letters to lawmakers or other officials—Blackman’s efforts as an example of 9 risks to press freedom and transparency. But Section 851.92(c) and the City Attorney’s 10 threats have led or will lead each Plaintiff to self-censor.

11 At its core, Section 851.92(c) provides officials an unbounded tool to silence almost 12 anyone sharing lawfully obtained information about newsworthy arrests. And as the City 13 Attorney’s threats highlight, officials can enforce the statute to discriminate against those 14 who publish sealed arrest information unkind to the government or influential persons. In 15 all cases, stifling the exercise of a core First Amendment right is no compelling government 16 interest. Strict scrutiny dooms this content-based law.¹

17 Without an immediate injunction, Section 851.92(c) and the City Attorney’s threats 18 will keep chilling not only Plaintiffs, but also journalists, advocates, scholars, victims, 19 witnesses, and many others who publish and comment on arrests of public concern. For 20 these reasons, the Court should enjoin Defendants from enforcing Section 851.92(c) with 21 respect to the dissemination of lawfully obtained information about a sealed arrest.

22 BACKGROUND

23 California allows arrestees to petition state courts to seal records about arrests that 24 cannot lead to a conviction due to acquittal, passage of time, or completion of a diversionary 25 program. Cal. Penal Code § 851.92(a). That statute requires law-enforcement agencies to 26

27 ¹ In addition to the law’s inability to withstand strict scrutiny, alone enough to justify 28 relief, it is also facially overbroad, reaching speech beyond any legitimate sweep. And it is hopelessly vague, leaving speakers to guess what information is secret or related to a sealed arrest.

1 stamp such records “SEALED: DO NOT RELEASE OUTSIDE OF THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE 2 SECTOR” and prohibits the agencies from sharing a sealed record with anyone other than 3 the arrestee to whom it pertains or with certain government actors. Id. §§ 851.92(b)(3)–(5).
 4 Enforcement of that prohibition, however, extends to civil penalties of up to $2,500 on any 5 person—except the arrestee and government agencies and employees, including those that 6 maintain the records—who “disseminates information relating to a sealed arrest.” Id.
 7 § 851.92(c) (the “anti-dissemination statute”). And the statute expressly allows 8 Defendants—a city attorney and the Attorney General—to enforce that civil penalty. Id.

11 Premise Data’s app paid users, “many of them in the developing world, to complete 12 basic tasks for small payments,” such as “snapping photos” or gathering information, often 13 used for marketing purposes.² But the company wasn’t turning a profit. So Premise brought 14 on a new CEO, Maury Blackman, a well-known executive experienced in selling technology 15 services to governments. His plan was to turn the app’s users—often in areas of conflict like 16 Iraq or Afghanistan—into intelligence agents. As the Wall Street Journal reported, he 17 “pushed to pursue more intelligence and military contracts” and Premise “stepped up its 18 presence in Washington,” adding employees who—like Blackman—had security clearances 19 and intelligence community connections.³

20 That practice proved controversial, particularly when Ukraine’s government accused 21 Premise (erroneously) of facilitating Russian intelligence during its invasion.⁴ Blackman’s 22 rocky tenure drew international media coverage from NBC News, the Wall Street Journal,

 2 Valley and the intelligence community dedicated a chapter to Blackman’s transformation of 3 Premise Data, which now draws most of its income from western intelligence agencies.⁶

5 Blackman and Premise also caught the attention of journalist and researcher Jack 6 Poulson, who publishes on relationships between Silicon Valley and intelligence agencies.⁷ 7 Poulson covered Premise’s acknowledgment, during litigation against ex-employees, of its 8 “clients in the military and intelligence sectors” and of Blackman’s security clearance.⁸ As 9 with anyone else holding a security clearance, Blackman must self-report arrests because 10 adversaries can threaten national security by exploiting embarrassing arrests.⁹ In September 11 2023, Poulson reported that Blackman had been “arrested for alleged felony domestic 12 violence against his 25-year-old girlfriend, but the charges were later dropped.”¹⁰

1 In doing so, Poulson published a redacted copy of the incident report, which he had 2 obtained lawfully, “unsolicited from a confidential source.” (Decl. Steinbaugh ¶ 12, Ex. 8 at 3 ¶ 5.) Blackman alleges that the San Francisco Police Department released the report in 4 response to a public records request. (Id. ¶ 10, Ex. 6 at ¶¶ 44–45.) Poulson had no reason to 5 know the report was sealed. (Id. ¶ 12, Ex. 8 at ¶ 6.) He communicated with the San Francisco 6 Police Department, which verified its authenticity, without informing him it was sealed. (Id.) 7 And the report did not bear the mandatory stamp indicating it was sealed. (Id.; see Cal. Penal 8 Code § 851.92(b)(3) (requiring agencies to stamp “SEALED: DO NOT RELEASE” on 9 incident reports).)

10 After the San Francisco Police released the report and Poulson published it, Blackman 11 resigned from Premise.¹¹ On October 3, 2024—over a year after Poulson’s publication—12 Blackman anonymously sued Poulson and Substack, the company that hosts his website, in 13 the San Francisco Superior Court. (Decl. Steinbaugh ¶ 10, Ex. 6.) Blackman alleged Poulson 14 violated the anti-dissemination statute both by publishing the report and by publishing a 15 “description of” its “contents.” (Id. at ¶¶ 21, 25, 166–171.)

16 The San Francisco City Attorney repeatedly threatens to use California’s anti- 17 dissemination statute for sharing information about the arrest.

18 Blackman also enlisted the Office of the City Attorney of San Francisco, headed by 19 Defendant David Chiu, to assist him. (Decl. Steinbaugh ¶¶ 5, 7, 11 & Exs. 1, 3, 7.) The Office 20 of the City Attorney obliged, sending three letters demanding that Poulson and Substack 21 censor any posts about the report under threat of enforcement of the anti-dissemination 22 statute. (Id. ¶¶ 6, 8–9 & Exs. 2, 4–5.) The City Attorney first pressured Substack, which hosts 23 Poulson’s publication, to remove posts about Blackman, sending a letter dated September 24 19, 2024, stating it had “come to our office’s attention” that the arrest report “as well as its 25 contents” was “published in multiple postings on your website.” (Id. ¶ 6, Ex. 2.) The letter

1 warned that the City Attorney “expect[ed]” the removal of “the document and its contents”
2 within four days, “[p]ursuant to” the anti-dissemination statute. (Id.)

3 Soon, Blackman personally reached out to Deputy City Attorney Jennifer Choi to 4 encourage “continued efforts in notifying Substack.” (Id. ¶ 7, Ex. 3 at 3.) On October 3, the 5 same day Blackman sued Poulson and Substack, Choi sent Substack a second letter, 6 complaining that its “inadequate” response fell short, again demanding removal of not only 7 the incident report but also of “posts related to the Incident Report.” (Id. ¶ 9, Ex. 5 at 1.) 8 (emphasis added). That same day, Choi also sent Poulson’s attorney a letter “[p]ursuant to” 9 the anti-dissemination statute warning Poulson that “we expect” removal of the report “and 10 its contents” from the internet “immediately.” (Id. ¶ 8, Ex. 4.) The next day, Blackman’s 11 attorney emailed Choi, sharing his “hope that your office will continue to help us in our 12 efforts to enforce these various laws designed to protect Mr. Blackman.” (Id. ¶ 11, Ex. 7 at 1.)

15 Plaintiff First Amendment Coalition (“FAC”) is a San Rafael-based nonpartisan 16 public-interest nonprofit dedicated to protecting and promoting a free press, freedom of 17 expression, and the people’s right to know. (Decl. of Virginia LaRoe (“Decl. LaRoe”) ¶ 6.) 18 FAC advocates—through public commentary and advocacy, such as letters to lawmakers and 19 other officials—for expressive freedom. (Id. ¶¶ 7–8.) Plaintiff Virginia “Ginny” LaRoe, FAC’s 20 Advocacy Director, wants to bring public attention to Blackman’s campaign to censor 21 coverage of his arrest. (Id. ¶¶ 3, 18–20, 24–26, 29–30, 33.) In addition to an opinion piece 22 published in a San Francisco newspaper, FAC and LaRoe want to send public letters, 23 including an open letter (which contains more information about the arrest report than the 24 opinion piece) criticizing the San Francisco City Attorney. (Id. ¶¶ 24–25.) They also want to 25 send public letters to lawmakers, post on social media, and comment in media interviews 26 about the same information targeted by the San Francisco City Attorney. (Id. ¶ 26.)

27 Plaintiff Eugene Volokh is a Senior Fellow at Stanford University’s Hoover Institution 28 and a Professor of Law Emeritus at UCLA School of Law. (Decl. of Eugene Volokh (“Decl.

1 Volokh”) ¶¶ 3–4.) He specializes in the First Amendment and related topics, and courts and 2 academics frequently cite his commentary. (Id. ¶ 5.¹²) For over twenty years, he has 3 published a legal blog, the Volokh Conspiracy, where he writes about First Amendment 4 issues, particularly those relating to access to government records, defamation, and 5 anonymous litigants. (Id. ¶¶ 6, 9–11.) He frequently documents efforts to “disappear” 6 content from the internet using the legal system, including through court orders and 7 defamation actions. (See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 9–11.) Blackman’s recent efforts—in league with the City 8 Attorney of San Francisco—to suppress and sue over public information about his arrest are 9 the sorts of things that Volokh would routinely write about. (Id. ¶ 13.)

10 The public benefits from informed commentary on the legal system and its use, 11 particularly uses designed to frustrate public knowledge about influential figures. Yet Volokh 12—a California attorney who does not want to violate the Penal Code—cannot write about 13 Blackman’s censorship campaign, or the San Francisco City Attorney’s support of it, let alone 14 republish the publicly available report, without “disseminating” information “relating to” 15 Blackman’s sealed arrest. (Decl. Volokh ¶¶ 23–27.) FAC and LaRoe face the same obstacle 16 to discussing Blackman’s campaign, which is the type of censorship FAC exists to oppose.
 17 (Decl. LaRoe ¶¶ 18–20, 24–32.) In sum, the statute’s existence and the City Attorney’s 18 threats to enforce it are both chilling each Plaintiff from expression they would ordinarily 19 publish or speak.

20 STATEMENT OF ISSUES TO BE DECIDED

21 1. Are Plaintiffs entitled to a preliminary injunction prohibiting enforcement of 22 California Penal Code § 851.92(c) on the basis that the law’s prohibition on the 23 dissemination of any “information” related to a sealed arrest is a content-discriminatory 24 measure that fails strict scrutiny?

 27 ¹² See also, e.g., Janus v. AFSCME, Council 31, 585 U.S. 878, 944 (2018) (Sotomayor, J., 28 dissenting); Aaron Tang & Fred O. Smith Jr., Can Unions Be Sued for Following the Law?, 132 Harv. L. Rev. F. 24 (2018) (responding to William Baude & Eugene Volokh, Compelled Subsidies and the First Amendment, 132 Harv. L. Rev. 171 (2018)).

ARGUMENT

The Court should grant Plaintiffs a preliminary injunction because (1) they are likely to succeed on the merits; (2) they will suffer irreparable harm absent injunctive relief; (3) the balance of equities tips in their favor; and (4) an injunction serves the public interest. Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008). And in First Amendment cases, the balance shifts dramatically. Because Plaintiffs make “a colorable claim that [their] First Amendment rights have been infringed, or are threatened with infringement” under Penal Code Section 851.92, “the burden shifts to the government to justify the restriction on speech.” Meinecke v. City of Seattle, 99 F.4th 514, 521 (9th Cir. 2024)

But Defendants cannot show the content-based statute withstands First Amendment scrutiny. Without exception, the Supreme Court has invalidated government efforts to punish those who lawfully obtain and publish information of public concern the government deems sensitive. E.g., Fla. Star, 491 U.S. at 541; Bartnicki, 532 U.S. at 534–35. And because the anti-dissemination statute irreparably harms the First Amendment rights of Plaintiffs and others to publish information “related to” sealed arrests, those “serious First Amendment questions . . . alone compel[] a finding that the balance of hardships tips sharply in [Plaintiffs’] favor.” Meinecke, 99 F.4th at 526 (quotation marks omitted).

The Court should thus enjoin Defendants from enforcing Penal Code § 851.92(c).

I. Plaintiffs Are Likely to Show the Anti-Dissemination Statute Violates the First Amendment.

Both as applied to Plaintiffs and on its face as to everyone who disseminates lawfully obtained information about sealed arrests, the anti-dissemination statute violates the First Amendment as a presumptively unconstitutional content-based speech restriction that cannot withstand strict scrutiny. Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 576 U.S. 155, 163 (2015); see also IMDb.com v. Becerra, 962 F.3d 1111, 1120 (9th Cir. 2020) (prohibition on “dissemination of one type of speech: ‘date of birth or age information’” was a content-discriminatory restriction on a category of speech). This is all the more so given binding Supreme Court precedent protecting dissemination of lawfully obtained information, see United States v.

1 Playboy Ent. Grp., 529 U.S. 803, 813 (2000) (citing Sable Commc'ns of Cal., Inc. v. FCC, 2 492 U.S. 115, 126 (1989)), and holding that penalizing dissemination as pertains to sealed 3 arrests is not the least restrictive means to achieve a compelling state interest. See Smith v.
4 Daily Mail Publ'g Co., 443 U.S. 97, 105 (1979) (other states had “found other ways of 5 accomplishing the objective” of protecting the identity of juvenile offenders).

6 A. The statute is a presumptively unconstitutional content-based 7 restriction on speech.

8 The anti-dissemination statute regulates speech in covering only “disseminat[ing] 9 information” and is content-based in reaching only speech “relating to a sealed arrest.” Cal.
10 Penal Code § 851.92(c). The “dissemination of information [is] speech within the meaning 11 of the First Amendment.” Sorrell v. IMS Health Inc., 564 U.S. 552, 570 (2011). That is 12 especially so as to publishing lawfully obtained information about public issues, like a tech 13 executive’s arrest that is relevant to the public debate about technology industry ethics, and 14 that could even jeopardize national security interests. As the Supreme Court held decades 15 ago, a state may not “punish publication” of “lawfully obtain[ed]” “truthful information 16 about a matter of public significance,” such as information about an arrestee. Daily Mail
17 Publ'g Co., 443 U.S. at 101, 103; see also, e.g., Worrell Newspapers of Ind. v. Westhafer, 739 18 F.2d 1219, 1221–25 (7th Cir. 1984) (striking down as overbroad a statute prohibiting any 19 person from disclosing the existence of a sealed indictment before the defendant is arrested).

20 The anti-dissemination statute is an “obvious” content-based regulation. Reed, 576 21 U.S. at 163–64. By barring “dissemination of information relating to a sealed arrest,” Cal.
22 Penal Code § 851.92(c), it targets speech “by particular subject matter”—i.e., information 23 about the subject of an arrest record—and makes “reference to the content of the regulated 24 speech” to determine the law’s application. Reed, 576 U.S. at 163–64 (quoting, in part, Ward 25 v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791 (1989)). Plaintiffs’ chilled speech illustrates the 26 statute’s operative focus on content. If Volokh publishes a blog post on any subject, the City 27 Attorney must read its content to ascertain whether it shares “information relating to” 28 Blackman’s sealed arrest. If FAC or LaRoe inform the public or government officials about

1 the free speech implications of Blackman’s lawsuit, an official would have to determine 2 whether the speech detailed anything “related to” the sealed arrest. Because the anti-3 dissemination statute is a content-based restriction on Plaintiffs’ speech, it is presumptively 4 unconstitutional as applied to them. See Reed, 576 U.S. at 163.

5 It is also presumptively unconstitutional on its face. By its content-based terms, the 6 statute penalizes disseminating lawfully obtained information about sealed arrests in an 7 extensive number of its applications. True enough, the statute also covers those who 8 disseminate information about sealed arrests they obtained through independently unlawful 9 means. But more predominantly, the anti-dissemination statute punishes only what the 10 First Amendment protects—publishing lawfully obtained information about matters of 11 public concern. See Daily Mail Publ’g Co., 443 U.S. at 104. And as detailed next, penalizing 12 that range of protected expression cannot survive constitutional scrutiny because it is facially 13 unconstitutional as to a substantial amount of the dissemination of lawfully obtained 14 information. See United States v. Stevens, 559 U.S. 460, 482 (2010) (a law will be 15 “invalidated as overbroad if ‘a substantial number of its applications are unconstitutional, 16 judged in relation to the statute’s plainly legitimate sweep’” (citation omitted)).

17 B. The statute fails strict scrutiny because California’s asserted 18 interest in reputation does not serve a compelling interest.

19 Being presumptively unconstitutional, the anti-dissemination statute triggers strict 20 scrutiny, but Defendants cannot meet the heavy burden of showing the law is “narrowly 21 tailored to serve compelling state interests.” Reed, 576 U.S. at 163 (citations omitted). First, 22 as the statute “punishes publication” of “lawfully obtain[ed,] truthful information about a 23 matter of public significance,” Defendants must show “a need to further a state interest of 24 the highest order,” Daily Mail Publ’g Co., 443 U.S. at 103, with a showing “far stronger than 25 mere speculation about serious harms” or “[u]nusual” incidents. Bartnicki, 532 U.S. at 531– 26 32 (citation omitted). And they must overcome the fact that the Supreme Court has never 27 upheld a comparable regulation even where there were far weightier interests, such as 28 encouraging rape victims to come forward and limiting publicity to the names of youthful

1 offenders, than those California identified in enacting the law. Fla. Star, 491 U.S. at 534 2 (name of rape victim); Daily Mail Publ'g Co., 443 U.S. at 99–104 (youthful offenders).

3 In enacting the statute, California sought to “remove barriers [to] employment and 4 housing opportunities” that an arrest history might pose. (Decl. Steinbaugh ¶ 14, Ex. 10 at 7 5 [California Senate Judiciary Committee legislative analysis].) Because “background checks 6 conducted by consumer reporting agencies” are the primary “way information of arrests 7 generally finds its way into the hands of potential employers, housing providers, and other 8 decision makers,” the Legislature sought to “[p]rovid[e] restraints on consumer reporting 9 agencies” by imposing the anti-dissemination statute’s civil penalty. (Id. at 9.)

10 But any governmental interest in remedying harm to an individual’s reputation—11 whether directly or because of economic reasons—takes a constitutional backseat to the First 12 Amendment right to share truthful information of public concern. “[R]eputational interests” 13 do not “justify the proscription of truthful speech.” Butterworth v. Smith, 494 U.S. 624, 634 14 (1990). Likewise, the desire to prevent employment discrimination does not generally justify 15 restricting truthful speech about people. See IMDB.com, 962 F.3d at 1125–26. Here, the anti-16 dissemination statute targets truthful statements—the fact of an arrest or the existence of a 17 sealed record—to avoid downstream economic harm. But the First Amendment does not 18 permit the State to privilege the reputation of a person—whether a public official, public 19 figure, or purely private person—over the dissemination of truthful statements of public 20 concern. Landmark Commc'ns, 435 U.S. at 841–42 (injury to “official reputation” of judges); 21 cf. N.Y. Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 279–80 (1964) (public officials must show falsity 22 and actual malice); Garrison v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 64, 72 & n.8, 74 (1964) (absolute defense 23 of truth in connection with any “public affairs”).

24 The Supreme Court’s decision in Florida Star v. B.J.F. illustrates why California’s 25 interests here fall short of being of the “highest order.” In Florida Star, the Supreme Court 26 invalidated a finding of civil liability against a newspaper for publishing the name of a rape 27 victim obtained from a publicly released police report. 491 U.S. at 526. The story concerned 28 only the victim’s report, not an arrest or trial. Id. at 527, 532. The Court found that the First

1 Amendment protected the newspaper’s truthful report and that “investigation of a violent 2 crime which had been reported to the authorities” was a “matter of public significance.” Id.
3 at 536–37. In doing so, it recognized that “the privacy of victims of sexual offenses,” risks to 4 their “physical safety . . . if their names become known to their assailants[,] and the goal of 5 encouraging victims” to come forward were “highly significant interests”—but these 6 interests did not amount to a compelling “need” to punish the publication. Id. at 537.

7 Compared to the privacy of a rape victim involuntarily thrust into the legal system, 8 speculation about potential economic harm from disclosure of a sealed arrest rings hollow.
9 That’s especially so here, where officials have rushed to the defense of a high-profile CEO.
10 Because the anti-dissemination statute does not serve a compelling state interest, it cannot 11 survive strict scrutiny, and the Court should enjoin it.

12 C. The anti-dissemination statute fails strict scrutiny because it is not 13 the least restrictive means or narrowly tailored.

14 Even if the anti-dissemination statute served a compelling interest, it still fails strict 15 scrutiny because Defendants cannot make the “exceptionally demanding” showing that it is 16 the “least-restrictive means” to meet that interest. Meinecke, 99 F.4th at 525 (quoting Holt 17 v. Hobbs, 574 U.S. 352, 364 (2015)). “If a less restrictive alternative would serve the 18 Government’s purpose, the legislature must use that alternative.” Playboy Ent. Grp., 529 19 U.S. at 813 (citation omitted). Under strict scrutiny, “[e]ven if a state intends to advance a 20 compelling government interest, we will not permit speech-restrictive measures when the 21 state may remedy the problem by implementing or enforcing laws that do not infringe on 22 speech.” IMDb.com, 962 F.3d at 1125.

23 The law is not narrowly tailored three times over: First, Supreme Court precedent 24 forecloses the state from punishing those who publish lawfully obtained facts of public 25 interest to reinforce the government’s interests in keeping its own confidences. Second, the 26 statute is over-inclusive because its plain language reaches any speaker, not just those with 27 an obligation to maintain a secret, and the State ignored obvious means of narrowing the 28 law in manners that would protect journalists, publishers, and public commentators. Third,

1 it is under-inclusive because it exempts the government agencies and employees who do 2 have an obligation to prevent the release of government records.

3 i. In reaching lawfully obtained information, the law crosses 4 clear lines set forth by the Supreme Court.

5 The anti-dissemination statute cannot survive strict scrutiny because it empowers 6 officials to sanction publication of lawfully obtained truthful information of public concern.
7 Such regulation disregards the unbroken line of cases in which the Supreme Court 8 repeatedly held that when a speaker “lawfully obtains truthful information about a matter of 9 public significance then state officials may not constitutionally punish publication of the 10 information absent a need . . . of the highest order.” Bartnicki, 532 U.S. at 527–28 (radio 11 commentator’s broadcast of a recording of a telephone call, which he knew was unlawfully 12 recorded by someone else, was protected by the First Amendment because the commentator 13 obtained it lawfully); see also, e.g., Worrell Newspapers of Ind., 739 F.2d at 1221–25 14 (statutory prohibition on disclosing the existence of a sealed indictment before the 15 defendant is arrested violated the First Amendment as applied to the media); supra cases 16 cited at p. 1. The dissemination of lawfully obtained information about sealed arrests—17 including Plaintiffs’ intended speech—falls squarely within these cases.

18 Plaintiffs obtained information about Blackman’s sealed arrest lawfully by reading 19 Jack Poulson’s public report. (Decl. Volokh ¶ 14–15; Decl. LaRoe ¶ 9–11.) Poulson, too, 20 obtained it lawfully. (Decl. Steinbaugh ¶¶ 10, 12; Ex. 6 at ¶¶ 44–45; Ex. 8 at ¶¶ 5–6.) Even if 21 he had some indication his source had unlawfully obtained the report—which did not bear 22 the mandatory stamp that would have indicated as much—the First Amendment protects its 23 publication. Bartnicki, 532 U.S. at 528–30. Indeed, Blackman’s own theory is that the San 24 Francisco Police Department negligently shared the report in response to a public records 25 request. (Decl. Steinbaugh ¶ 10, Ex. 6 at ¶¶ 44–46.) If so, the government is at fault—which 26 may be why the San Francisco City Attorney is eager to deploy the anti-dissemination statute 27 to put the horse back in the barn. Fla. Star, 491 U.S. at 534 (where government has “sensitive 28

1 information” in its custody, it must take steps to “forestall or mitigate the injury caused by 2 its release” short of penalizing publishers).

3 The information Blackman wants to be suppressed involves matters of public 4 concern. With respect to the underlying incident report, the “commission, and investigation, 5 of a violent crime which has been reported to the authorities” is a “matter of paramount 6 public import.” Fla. Star, 491 U.S. at 537; see also Cox Broad. Corp. v. Cohn, 420 U.S. 469, 7 492 (1975) (“The commission of crime, prosecutions resulting from it, and judicial 8 proceedings arising from the prosecutions . . . are without question events of legitimate 9 concern to the public”). Blackman’s arrest is of public concern not only because of his status 10 as a controversial technology industry executive widely covered in the press but also because 11 his arrest implicates his security clearance. So, too, are the circumstances of Blackman’s 12 successful petition to seal the arrest report of legitimate public interest. Briggs v. Eden 13 Council for Hope & Opportunity, 969 P.2d 564, 571 (Cal. 1999) (every legal proceeding 14 “possesses some measure of ‘public significance’”). And efforts by Blackman and the City 15 Attorney to suppress reporting about the arrest, including Blackman’s lawsuit, are 16 independently matters of public concern.

17 ii. The statute is overinclusive, reaching beyond consumer 18 reporting agencies and ignoring means to exempt publishers.

19 The anti-dissemination statute is also not properly tailored because when “informa-20 tion is entrusted to the government, a less drastic means than punishing truthful publication 21 almost always exists for guarding against the dissemination of private facts.” Fla. Star, 491 22 U.S. at 534. Here, there are obvious ways the Legislature could have written the law while 23 burdening less speech:¹³

24
25 ¹³ Though Plaintiffs do not concede that such narrower laws would be constitutional, 26 their potential availability shows that the current statute is unconstitutional. Cf., e.g., Wal- 27 Mart Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Zaragoza-Gomez, 834 F.3d 110, 127 n.16 (1st Cir. 2016) (“In listing 28 these possible alternatives, we do not decide that any of those particular alternatives are themselves sufficiently narrow to survive dormant Commerce Clause scrutiny. It suffices for our purposes to say that the availability of those less restrictive alternatives invalidates the AMT in its current form.”).

1 Eliminating the ambiguous “relating to” language. The statute is not only broad in 2 who it restricts, but also in what they are prohibited from communicating. It prohibits not 3 only the dissemination of particular documents but any information “relating” to them—a 4 term so expansive it cannot be understood with reasonable clarity. See San Diego Unified 5 Sch. Dist. v. Yee, 30 Cal. App. 5th 723, 733 (2018) (noting “broad” meaning of “relating to” 6 as “to stand in some relation; to have bearing or concern; to pertain; refer; to bring into 7 association with or connection with”) (quoting Morales v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 504 8 U.S. 374, 383–84 (1992)). That ambiguity compounds its chilling effect, requiring speakers 9 to guess whether their comments might relate to a sealed arrest—and exemplifying why the 10 statute is not narrowly tailored. For example, Volokh must guess whether writing about 11 Blackman’s “John Doe” lawsuit may trigger liability, even if he does not use Blackman’s 12 name, because the litigation “relates to” the sealed record. (Decl. Volokh ¶¶ 23–25.) FAC and 13 LaRoe similarly must guess whether they can discuss the basis of Blackman’s lawsuit or 14 Blackman’s censorship campaign in their public advocacy. (Decl. LaRoe ¶¶ 27–28, 30–31.)

15 Exempting publishers, including journalists. California’s legislature frequently 16 exempts people or entities defined in California Evidence Code Section 1070, which broadly 17 protects people affiliated with media outlets, when it crafts statutes dealing with sensitive 18 information.¹⁴ It chose not to with this statute, instead leaving it to threaten journalists’ right 19 to report on lawfully obtained information without risk of liability under the Penal Code.
20 Indeed, while Blackman can file a civil suit against a journalist who reported on his arrest, 21 other media outlets and commentators—like Volokh—risk a civil penalty if they write about 22 that unsealed lawsuit, because doing so may disclose information related to the sealed arrest.

23 Limiting the penalty to authorized persons who disclose information to 24 unauthorized persons. An earlier version of the bill would have made it a misdemeanor

25 _____
26 ¹⁴ See, e.g., Cal. Gov’t Code § 6208.1(b)(3) (in regulating the posting of addresses of 27 victims of domestic violence, providing that the law “shall not apply to a person or entity 28 defined in Section 1070 of the Evidence Code”); Cal. Gov’t Code § 6218(b)(3) (same, with respect to information pertaining to reproductive health care providers); Cal. Lab. Code § 432.7(g)(3) (possession of criminal or juvenile records); Cal. Penal Code § 11143 (criminal history information).

1 offense for a “person who is authorized to have access to information relating to an expunged 2 arrest [to] disseminate[] information relating to an expunged arrest to a person who is not 3 authorized.” (See Decl. Steinbaugh ¶ 15, Ex. 11 at 5 (S.B. No. 393, as introduced, at proposed 4 § 851.867(g)(1))). This narrowing language, although imperfect,¹⁵ would have allowed the 5 State to insist that its agencies and employees maintain secrecy without obligating every 6 member of the public to do the same.¹⁶ Yet the State chose not to adopt that narrower 7 version.

8 Including an intent requirement. The statute could also be narrowed by requiring 9 intent to disseminate the information for unlawful purposes, like identity theft or extortion.
10 That would go far in providing breathing space for protected speech like publishing lawfully 11 obtained sealed arrest information as part of the news, commentary, criticism, scholarship, 12 and a host of other lawful purposes. See Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447 (1969) 13 (requiring a showing of purposeful intent in incitement cases); see also Counterman v.
14 Colorado, 600 U.S. 66, 74–82 (2023) (requiring recklessness standard for “true threats” 15 statutes and explaining why requiring subjective intent helps preserves First Amendment 16 breathing space). But instead, the law ensnares all those purposes, strangling the First 17 Amendment and cementing why it fails strict scrutiny.

18 Regulating discrimination based on arrest records. Finally, if California is concerned 19 with use of arrest records to deny employment or housing, it can prohibit discrimination on 20 that basis. California, indeed, already does so to some extent, demonstrating that it can 21 accomplish these goals without burdening speech. See, e.g., Cal. Gov’t Code § 12952(a)(3)(A)

22 23 ¹⁵ The law would be clearer if it limited its application to persons authorized to have access by virtue of their employment by a law-enforcement agency.

24 ¹⁶ The legislative history also shows that lawmakers were concerned with the need to 25 deter “consumer reporting agencies,” which are “generally” how “information of arrests . . .
26 finds its way” into the public, from continuing to disclose information about sealed arrests.
(Decl. Steinbaugh ¶ 14, Ex. 10 at 9.) The statute provides a definition of these agencies, and 27 the Legislature could have simply barred a “[c]riminal history provider” from disseminating 28 sealed records—a far narrower burden than prohibiting any “person or entity” from sharing truthful information. Cal. Penal Code § 851.92(c), (d)(3). But even this narrower measure would not survive First Amendment scrutiny. See Sorrell, 564 U.S. at 568–577 (striking down limits on information the speaker already possesses.)

1 (limiting employers’ consideration of an “[a]rrest not followed by conviction” in hiring 2 decisions); 2 Cal. Code Regs. 12264, et seq. (regulations on the use of criminal history in 3 housing).

4 iii. The statute is underinclusive because it exempts those 5 responsible for safeguarding sealed records.

6 The anti-dissemination statute is also not properly tailored because it under-7 inclusively exempts the very people most likely to negligently (or purposefully) share sealed 8 arrest information—government employees within the criminal justice system—“rais[ing] 9 serious doubts” whether the law serves its asserted objective. Fla. Star, 491 U.S. at 540; see 10 also Republican Party v. White, 536 U.S. 765, 780 (2002) (noting a “law cannot be regarded 11 as protecting an interest of the highest order” when “it leaves appreciable damage to that 12 supposedly vital interest unprohibited”).

13 Specifically, the statute exempts from its civil penalty every “criminal justice agency,” 14 which it defines broadly to include law-enforcement agencies and individual officers, 15 relieving them of a strong incentive to avoid mishandling sealed arrest records. Cal. Penal 16 Code §§ 851.92(c), (d)(4). The government can insist that its employees maintain the 17 confidentiality of sensitive records, and it can provide a civil remedy to persons affected 18 when its employees fail to do so, but it cannot “enhance the guarantee of confidentiality” by 19 burdening the public’s speech. Landmark Commc’ns, 435 U.S. at 841.

20 Because there are obvious means of narrowing the anti-dissemination statute to avoid 21 burdening protected speech, Defendants cannot satisfy strict scrutiny. Both as applied to 22 Plaintiffs and on its face as extended to disseminating lawfully obtained information about 23 sealed arrests, the anti-dissemination statute violates the First Amendment.

24 II. Plaintiffs Are Experiencing Irreparable Harm in the Absence of 25 Preliminary Injunctive Relief.

26 Without a preliminary injunction, Plaintiffs are experiencing irreparable harm. The 27 “loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably 28 constitutes irreparable injury.” Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976). Because a plaintiff need only show a “colorable” claim, “irreparable harm is relatively easy to establish in a First

1 Amendment case.” CTIA – The Wireless Ass’n v. City of Berkeley, 928 F.3d 832, 851 (9th
2 Cir. 2019). Even just the “threat of enforcement” resulting in a “chill on . . . free speech
3 rights . . . constitutes irreparable harm.” Cuviello v. City of Vallejo, 944 F.3d 816, 833 (9th 4 Cir. 2019). Here, the statute and the City Attorney’s threats have only heightened that chill.
5 They are deterring Plaintiffs from commenting on or writing about Blackman’s apparent 6 (and actual) efforts to suppress public discussion of the arrest in the same manner they 7 would discuss the dispute in the statute’s absence. (Decl. LaRoe ¶¶ 24–32; Decl. Volokh 8 ¶¶ 22–27.) A preliminary injunction is warranted to remedy that irreparable loss of 9 constitutional rights.

10 III. Injunctive Relief Serves the Public Interest and the Balance of Harms 11 Tips in Plaintiffs’ Favor.

12 The remaining factors similarly support grant of a preliminary injunction. When “the 13 party opposing injunctive relief is a government entity, the third and fourth factors—the 14 balance of equities and the public interest—“merge.” Fellowship of Christian Athletes v. San 15 Jose Unified Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ., 82 F.4th 664, 695 (9th Cir. 2023) (en banc) (quoting 16 Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 435 (2009)). Because Plaintiffs raise “serious First 17 Amendment questions” about the anti-dissemination statute, “that alone compels a finding 18 that the balance of hardships tips sharply in [their] favor.” Meinecke, 99 F.4th at 526. And 19 “it is always in the public interest to prevent the violation of a party’s constitutional rights,” 20 Melendres v. Arpaio, 695 F.3d 990, 1002 (9th Cir. 2012), as “all citizens have a stake in 21 upholding the Constitution,” Preminger v. Principi, 422 F.3d 815, 826 (9th Cir. 2005).

22 Additionally, given the minimal impact on Defendants, the Court should not require 23 a bond. The Court has discretion “as to the amount of security required, if any,” under 24 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65(c), and it “may dispense with the filing of a bond when it 25 concludes there is no realistic likelihood of harm to the defendant from enjoining [their] 26 conduct.” Johnson v. Couturier, 572 F.3d 1067, 1086 (9th Cir. 2009) (citation and quotation 27 marks omitted). Courts regularly waive the bond requirement in free speech cases because 28

1 requiring a bond “would have a negative impact” on constitutional rights. Baca v. Moreno
2 Valley Unified Sch. Dist., 936 F.Supp. 719, 738 (C.D. Cal. 1997) (citation omitted).

3 CONCLUSION

4 The Court should grant a preliminary injunction prohibiting Defendants from 5 enforcing California Penal Code Section 851.92(c) against Plaintiffs and against persons and 6 entities who publish lawfully obtained information about sealed arrests.

Jennifer,

Thank you for your continued efforts in notifying Substack about the court-ordered sealing of my incident, which occurred nearly three years ago. Despite this clear legal directive, the document remains unlawfully hosted on both Substack's platform and their hosting provider, Amazon Web Services (AWS). David Marek (cc'd) recently sent another letter on my behalf to Substack, as well as other relevant parties.

Substack's legal representative has now responded, though disappointingly, they continue to assert that they are under no obligation to adhere to the court order. As you know, this is factually incorrect. I have attached their response for your reference.

Notably, their letter completely fails to acknowledge the existence of the court-ordered seal, which is the core issue here. Instead, they rely on generalized arguments about Section 230 protections, without any recognition of the specific legal obligations imposed by the court order.

If you don't mind, I would appreciate it if you could speak with Jim and David about this situation.

Best,

Maury

Re: Publication of Sealed Document by Substack

Dear Mr. Baskin:

On September 19, 2024, my office notified your client Substack in writing that it had published a sealed San Francisco Police Department incident report number 210844280 ("Incident Report") on its platform, in violation of a court order and Substack's own "Acceptable Use Policy." We demanded that Substack immediately remove the Incident Report and its contents from its website and ensure that the index to postings no longer allow for it to be downloaded. Substack failed to do so.

Instead, on September 24, 2024, you responded on behalf of Substack and advised that Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act bars Substack from liability for the content posted by its users. You then recommended that the City contact the post's publisher.

Your September 24, 2024 response is inadequate. Regardless of whether Substack has liability for continuing to post the Incident Report on its platform, Substack is now on notice that the posting of the Incident Report violates its own "Acceptable Use Policy" as well as a court order. Substack has also failed to remove what it now knows to be a posting that violates its own "Acceptable Use Policy" as well as a court order. Your September 24, 2024 letter also fails to state whether Substack has asked the author of the posts to comply with Substack's "Acceptable Use Policy" and take down the posts related to the Incident Report.

While the City will also contact the author of the posts, Substack has a separate duty to follow its own "Acceptable Use Policy" and court orders.

1 I, Maury Blackman, declare as follows:

2 1. I am the Chief Executive Officer of Premise Data Corporation (“Premise”).
3 Premise is the plaintiff in the above-captioned consolidated action Premise Data Corporation
4 v. Alex Pompe, Santa Clara Superior Court Case No. 19CV346678 (the “Consolidated 5 Action”). I have personal knowledge of the facts stated herein. If called upon as a witness, I 6 could and would testify competently to the following facts.

7 2. Premise has clients in the military and intelligence sectors, which represent a 8 portion of its overall client base.

9 3. Premise’s engagement agreements with clients in the military and intelligence 10 sectors contain strict confidentiality provisions which expressly prohibit Premise from 11 disclosing the engagement, including the identity of the client and the nature of the work 12 contemplated by the agreement. It is Premise’s understanding, based on communications with 13 these military and intelligence clients, that confidentiality of these engagements is critical 14 because many of Premise’s military and intelligence clients and projects deal with sensitive 15 and highly-confidential information relating to national security.

16 4. Key Premise personnel, including myself, hold security clearance with the 17 United States Department of Defense and a number of military and intelligence clients require 18 Premise personnel to maintain a security clearance for the exchange of information. Premise 19 itself holds a Facility Security Clearance (FCL), which allows it to perform contracts involving 20 access to classified information. Premise is required to maintain certain internal security 21 controls, including only discussing classified information within closed meetings of cleared 22 personnel, in order to maintain the FCL.

23 5. If Premise is unable to maintain the confidentiality of the identities of these 24 military and intelligence clients in this civil litigation, this would cause Premise incalculable 25 business harm because it is Premise’s understanding that its ability to obtain work from these 26 clients is conditioned on its ability to honor its commitment not to divulge this information 27 under any circumstances.

1 6. Further, given that these secrecy and confidentiality requirements under which 2 Premise offers services to these clients are to safeguard national security, if Premise is required 3 by this Court to divulge such information, it could compromise national security.

4 7. Moreover, should this information be disclosed, it could directly endanger 5 Premise’s contributors around the world, who may be wrongly perceived as working for 6 military or intelligence clients simply by virtue of having the Premise app on their phones.

7 8. As a final point, beyond its confidentiality obligation to these clients and the 8 national security concerns, Premise maintains the identity of these clients and the work done 9 for them as a closely-guarded trade secret. That these particular clients have a need for the 10 data services Premise is providing and the exact scope of these services, as well as the manner 11 in which Premise provides services and meets the needs of these customers, is information that 12 derives its value from not being known to the public or Premise’s competitors because this 13 information can be used to validate non-public market or customer needs and aid competitors 14 in competing against Premise.

15 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the 16 foregoing is true and correct and that this declaration was executed at San Francisco, 17 California, on August 24, 2023.

Maury Blackman
